Policy Discussion Series-XVI

Messages of Peace Process of Nepal

By

Geja Sharma Wagle

Venue: Martin Chautari Seminar Hall, Thapathali

Date: Sunday, 29 Dec 2013 [14 Poush 2070]

Time: 3:00 pm

Integration and reintegration of rebel army and management of their arms become frequently contentious during the peace process in insurgency-ridden countries. Indeed, such process runs high risks of failure across the contemporary world. But Nepal recently set some unique positive precedence and principles on integration and reintegration as well as the management of arms. In fact, Nepal concluded this process successfully and established a unique Nepali model. While every conflict and peace process is unique, Nepal's indigenous and unique integration and reintegration process has set some unique precedence for integration and reintegration and conveyed some positive messages for peaceful resolution of violent conflicts.

Wagle will analyse the armed conflict of Nepal and its human and economic loss. He will explain the negotiation process among political parties, Maoists and others on peace process and present interesting facts and figures, including those related to the weapons of the Maoist army and the financial cost of the peace process. He will conclude with some lessons to be learnt from Nepal for peaceful resolution of violent conflicts.

Geja Sharma Wagle is the Executive Director of the Nepal Institute for Policy Studies, a Kathmandu-based think-tank on security, strategic studies and international relations. He is also a research fellow of the University of Birmingham. He served as an advisor to the Prime Minister in 2001 and 2002 and previously was a consultant to UK's Department for International Development in Nepal. He writes regularly for Nepali newspapers and international journals and magazines on peace, security and strategic issues. He teaches national security at the Department for Conflict, Peace and Development Studies of Tribhuvan University. He has co-edited two books: Emerging Security Challenges of Nepal and Human Security in Nepal: Concepts, Issues and Challenges.

About the Series

The Policy Discussion Series is an initiative of Martin Chautari and the Southasia Institute of Advanced Studies (SIAS) under the aegis of Nepal Policy Research Network (NPRN). It aims to nurture a "community of practice" around public policy in Nepal, by bringing together experienced and emerging public policy scholars and practitioners to share their research insights and experiences with a larger audience.

With this Series, we seek to stimulate debates on contemporary public policy issues, policy research methodologies, and institutions that create policy knowledge.

The Series is also a forum for the sharing of findings of policy-related research.

Participation is open to all.
